So it's no real surprise that Kyle Smith, a redheaded thirtysomething editor for People, has served up a novel about a redheaded thirtysomething editor for a tabloid newspaper. Love Monkey , with its numbered lists and male neuroses, plays like Nick Hornby's High Fidelity cross-pollinated with Toby Young's memoir, How to Lose Friends and Alienate People .

Review | Love Monkey by Kyle Smith

Kyle Smith (born 1966) is an American critic, novelist, and essayist. He is a former film critic for the New York Post and is currently critic-at-large at National Review as well as theater critic for The New Criterion. A writer in Entertainment Weekly described Smith's film-reviewing style "an exercise in hilarious hostility".
